The Right Partner for Improved Process Safety

Do you want to prevent process-related injuries and incidents? Are you looking for new ways to achieve sustainable improvements in business continuity and asset productivity? Are you interested in sustaining right-to-operate status and a positive reputation among all stakeholders?

If so, we can help. At DSS, we have developed a collaborative approach to process safety that can be customized to your own unique challenges.

Our expertise is based upon DSS real-world experience, with a focus on both the cultural aspects of an organization and the technical elements. This cultural change will help you sustain improved Process Safety Management (PSM) performance long after we have completed our engagement.

Equally important, our experts have been in the same position as our clients and faced the same challenges within their businesses. Based on this vast operational experience, we have refined our disciplines, structures and methodologies in ways that can be replicated, put into practice, tested and fine-tuned for almost any situation or industry.

PSM Provides Continuous Improvement & Competitive Edge

Achieving a competitive edge also requires a system that drives continuous improvement and protects a company's employees, its surrounding community, the environment and its profits. We believe that sustainable safety performance requires a robust PSM system driven by operational discipline, in addition to occupational and behavioral safety management systems.

The Process Safety Management System Solution

Implemented properly, PSM can be an effective tool for increasing not only the safety of an operation, but its efficiency, cost-effectiveness, and quality. While it is currently an OSHA and US-EPA requirement for a limited number of industries and chemicals, PSM is increasingly becoming the standard that is applied to many hazardous processes around the globe. The importance of people and leadership for successful implementation of PSM in a safety culture cannot be overemphasized and is a key belief of DSS. That is why at the core of the model is Management Commitment. Our experience has proven that strong leadership commitment facilitates implementation of a strong safety management system and is necessary to implement and sustain real step changes in performance.

Using a common foundation of 22 elements including technical skills such as process hazard analysis and management of change, in addition to leadership and cultural factors, DSS experts in PSM help move organizations through stages of awareness and improvements from best practices, to benchmarking, planning and implementation. And every step is laser focused on results.
